Overview

I am a historian specialising in the history of political thought and culture.
My current project addresses the historical creation, development, and reception of Euroscepticism within British political history. I am interested, in particular, with how debates of Europe intersect with British constitutionalism in the creation of Euroscepticism. Ultimately, the project aims to explore how Euroscepticism became a dominant political idea in the post-war period and reflect on what this means for the British constitution, political actors, and parties.
